The Secretary said that he and others had briefed [redacted] on the CIA study of the Soviet economy. [redacted] as an economist asked how we got to these conclusions from the slim data base that is available on the Soviet economy.

a. I volunteered that we would put together a short briefing on how we got our information and drew our conclusions. I proposed to the Secretary that we forward this to George Carver along with a copy of the Secret version of the study, and that George deliver both items to [redacted] whenever he gives the civil defense briefing.

b. In addition, I think it would be useful to us and to others in Washington to put together a description of our sources and methodology to the extent we possibly can. There is considerable skepticism in town as to the validity of our study. This might help people understand its strengths better.
